

Quels enfants laisserons-nous à la planète ?

What children will we leave to the planet?

A film by Anne Barth
Produced by Michel Valentin

This question is central to the practice of Isabelle Peloux, a teacher at the Colibri elementary school which she founded at Amanins.

Working intensively with the school for a year, Franco-Quebec director Anne Barth sensitively captured the interactions between Isabelle, the teachers-in-training and the students.

What children will we leave to the planet? is an educational film and door that opens upon an enlightened and inspiring approach to teaching.

The intention of the film is simple: to show that living in peace, being a responsible and accountable citizen is a way of life that can be learned.

Information : info@annebarth.org

Isabelle Peloux is head of the Colibri School at the Agro-Ecological Centre Amanins in Drôme, France. As a school teacher, an instructor in communication and conflict management for teachers-in-training, and a moderator for parents groups, she promotes the values of cooperative teaching and peace education.

Anne Barth Director. After teaching for 30 years at the university level in Quebec and making several short films, Anne is pursuing her creative efforts in both Quebec and France. For her, making a film is a way to bring people together and to infuse the experience with beauty and sincerity.
www.annebarth.org

"What children will we leave to the planet?" takes us into the very heart of education, our own and that of future generations...
An education focussed on the need to learn to work together, on the need to educate in order to raise awareness.